

A Friend in Need is a
a Friend Indeed

Fazli Baharuddin

In a sunny meadow surrounded by flowers, Benny the rabbit and Toby the turtle are the best of friends. They play every day, hopping, laughing, and exploring together. “We’re different,” said Benny, “but that makes us perfect friends!” Toby nodded happily.

The sun was high, and Benny suggested a race to the river. Toby smiled, “You’ll win, but I’ll try!” They laughed as they started. Benny hopping ahead, Toby slowly following behind.

After a while, Benny looked back, but Toby was gone!
He hopped in circles, calling, “Toby? Where are you?”
The forest nearby looked dark and quiet. Benny’s ears twitched nervously.

Then he heard it, “Help! I’m stuck!”
Benny followed the voice and found Toby trapped between some fallen branches near the riverbank.
“Oh no, hold on!” Benny shouted, rushing to help.

Benny tried pushing the branches with all his strength, but they were too heavy. “Don’t give up!” Toby said calmly. Benny thought for a moment and then ran off with an idea.

Benny returned with a stick he found nearby.
Using it as a lever, he pushed, CRACK! The branch moved,
and Toby crawled out!
They both cheered and laughed with relief.

As the sun set, the two friends sat by the river.

“Thanks for saving me,” said Toby.

“And thank you for trusting me,” said Benny.

They smiled and whispered together, “A friend in need is a friend indeed.”
