

The Witch, the Dwarf, and the Village of Smiles

In a quiet village, people feared an old witch who lived deep in the forest. She had messy grey hair, a crooked nose, and wore dark robes.

Nearby, a small dwarf named Brin lived alone.
Because of his short height and unusual looks,
villagers ignored him.

One day, the village well dried up. The villagers quickly blamed the witch, believing she had cursed them.

Brin didn't believe the witch was evil. He decided to visit her, even though others warned him not to.

When Brin met the witch, he was surprised. She spoke gently and offered him warm soup.

The witch explained that the real problem was a giant rock blocking the underground water source.

Brin and the witch worked together. Using her magic and his clever ideas, they moved the giant rock.

Water flowed back to the village. The well was full again, and the villagers were shocked.

The villagers realized they were wrong. They thanked the witch and welcomed Brin as a hero.

From that day on, the witch was no longer feared, and Brin was no longer ignored. They became true friends, reminding everyone not to judge by appearance.
